

2009 UNCLOUDY DAY, PROPRIETARY WHITE WINE

WINEMAKER NOTES

UncLOUDY Day is the title of one of my favorites from guitar great John Fahey, whose music I love (you can find two recordings of it – of which the later one is the best – on ‘The Legend of Blind Joe Death’). Chardonnay, when not made in the typical overweight California style has the same sort of clarity that this recording has (to me, at any rate) – I suppose that’s why I chose that name. Rarely a true purist, small amounts of Roussanne and Viognier make cameo appearances as well.

This is a wine that has the capacity to age, so if enjoying it during the early stages of its (then very short) life, decant for an hour or two beforehand (and save a little for day 2).
